Mr. Reagan announced the so-called START talks in a Memorial Day address at Arlington: National Cemetery.

The announcement was made simultaneously by the Soviet Umon, The Washington Post reported from Moscow. The U.S. negotiating team will be headed by retired Lt. Gen. Edward L. Rowny, deputy chief of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. Gen. Rowny, while representing the int Chiefs of Staff during the SALT-2 negotiations, became opposed to the treaty and quit the post to lobby against its passage. President Jimmy Carter withdrew SALT-2 from Senate consideration after the Soviet intervention in

Dispatches Tell of British Soldiers' Sleepless Nights in Muddy Foxholes

"Port San Carlos, a collection of half a dozen cream-painted sheep farmers houses, is honey-combed with foxholes, where the soldiers live and sleep, "Leslie Dowd of Renters wrote. "Set amid the lonely splendor of the Falkland Islands scenery, the raids have assumed a terrible beauty."

His account, and several others that reached London on Sunday via naval communications after going through military consorship, paid particular tribute to the bravery of the Argentine pilots, who often seem to be strafing the British beachhead with little regard for Sunday Telegraph said in a dispatch. He said the first air attack came almost immediately after the initial landing.

"Within 20 minutes," he reported, "we were face down on the marshy turf as the Argentine plane skimmed the hillside. The ships' sirens wail above the clatter of helicopters over San Carlos water, and the commandos with radio sets call: 'Air raid red! Take cover now!' Then the Argentine jets scream in from all sides as men slam themselves into the mud of their trenches, grabbing weapons and steel helmets."

The British troops, he said, "are ready to stay here for mouths, if oecessary, without even thinking of putting up tents, which might be seen by the coemy." Another correspondent, Ian Bruce of The Glasgow

A 4-fout-by-2-fout slit-trench has become both bome and a place of relative safety as the enemy jets weave down."

Several of the correspondents described "combat field porridge," a mixture made from the rations all the troops were issued. It consists of oats, slices of dried apple, salt, sugar, nuts, water and raisins.

"The technique for survival is simple," Mr. Laurence wrote. "Always wear dry clothes when resting, even if it means putting wet elothes back on for work. Eat the full ration pack. 5,000 calories, and have as many hot drinks as you can. This last rule would be easier if it were not for the strict rule against any form of light during the 16 hours of darkness. But life has looked up since the fresh water ration was increased." But prim as conditions are for the troops in the Falklands, they are - at least from the point of view of the weather - worse on South Georgia Island, the tiny dependency that the British recaptured from the Argentines on April 25. Winter is closing in there, with icebergs drifting into the harbor at Grytviken. Blizzards are increasing in ferocity.

American industry, the symbol of a new kind of worker - young militant, balking at authority, unwilling to put up with repetitive, tedious work. Today, much has changed at the General Motors assembly plant here, not the least of which is the militancy of its workers. In 1972, after a new, aggressive management reorganized jobs and established what it boasted was the world's fastest auto assembly line, producing 100 new Vegas an hour, the workers rebelled. They refused tasks. They slowed their pace. They conducted sabotage. In March of that year, they struck for 22 days.

Now, however, the anto industry is in grave decline and the thought of unemployment looms over Lordstown. The buge complex, which had 7,200 workers in 1972 and reached Moreover, the workers are a decade older.

They have married. They have children, homes, cars — responsibilities.

Nick Schecodnick, who in 1972 was a repair welder sporting a handsome walrus mustache, was angry at the company then, saying management must institute workplace reforms such as team assembly. Today he is a cleanshaven supervisor, a member of management; he is no longer a union man.

Lordstown, be says, has changed for the better. Union and company people who caused trouble have left, he says, and the plant atmosphere is far more conducive to good work. There was, perhaps, an element of hyperbole to Lordstown 10 years ago. And if it was an exaggeration then to portray the workers as a ally depressed economy, not all the militancy has been squeezed out of the workers. Their anger may be less quick, less automatic. We have som of mellowed in the way we We're still militant, but it takes a little longer to get us to fight," said another worker.

"We still have strong convictions," said B.C. Cavalcante, who was coaching in a softball game between the maintenance and inspection think," said Sandi Flanigan, a eushion-room

But the workers still fight their company and their international union. Recently, by a vote of 4,557 to 1,296, they rejected a contract, and its precedeot-setting concessions, that had been worked out by GM and United Auto Workers.

In addition, local bargaining has begun, and the workers are expected to cootest bitterly any local concessions.

Bad blood remains between the local and the international union. Some local workers regard the UAW as allies of management. The international considers the local militant and unruly. The local union defied the internacional recently and organized a meeting of GM assembly plant workers to discuss ways to resist local concessions.

When GM finished the Lordstown complex in 1966, it thought it had found a perfect location. The site, near Interstate 80 in northeastem Ohio, would attract workers from farms as well as old manufacturing cities such as Niles, Youngstown and Akron, the company be-millions in development. Sophisticated robot welders were used and GM tonted the car and its manufacturing techniques as answers to European and Japanese imports.

In October, 1971, GM placed control of its Lordstown operations in the hands of new management, which rapidly instituted signifi-cant reorganization. Jobs were eliminated or consolidated. Some employees were given extra work. The assembly line began turning out new Vegas at 100 an hour.

This brought the workers' rebellion, slowdowns, sabotage and strike. Five thousand grievances piled up, and reporters and authors descended on Lordstown like archaeologists to a dig. What emerged, in 1972 and into the mid-

1970s, was called the "Lordstown syndrome," or the blue-collar blues. It was reported that militant young workers like those at Lordstown, where the average age was 24, would no longer put up with monotonous tasks, they

"I think what was portrayed was true to a point," said Bill Bowers, Local 1112 vice president. But he added that once writers "had depleted the words available to describe the situation, they began digging for everything they could to paint a picture of militancy.'

Some militancy remains today, but most workers agree that GM is far less authoritarian than they used to consider it.

They have a lot of worker-involvement programs to be able to relate to the worker in a better fashion, not just dictate as a white shirt." Mr. Bowers said.

LONDON — The British victories at Goose Green and Darwin, where the British were reportedly outnumbered 2 to 1, appear to vindicate the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's doctrine that aggressive, well-officered infantry constantly on the move can defeat a numerically superior enemy tied to fixed defenses.

British military sources believe that similar tactics, supported by naval gunfire and Harrier jets, should enable the paratroops and marine commandos to engage the Argentine garrison at Stanley on something like even terms. These sources are confident that the superior training and morale of the British professionals will be decisive.

The unknown ingredient in the tactical situation is how and where the British 5th Brigade will be used. The brigade, made up of two Guards battalions and one Gurkha battalion, has now been transferred from the Queen Elizabeth 2 to assault ships and represents Rear Adm. John F. Woodward's floating reserve.

Infantry Vs. Planes

British infantry operations so far have been characterized by the use of heavy weapons to prepare for well-planned rushes against Ar-gentine positions. Boca House, an Argentine position strengthened by bunkers near Darwin, was de-molished by fire from Milan anti-tank missiles while paratroops swept around the fortification to neutralize supporting forces, ac-cording to British sources. The operations also supported the tactical concept that trained infantrymen with anti-aircraft missiles can deal with attacks from low-flying aircraft. The infantry in the Darwin-Goose Green assault were attacked by six Pucara fighter-bombers. Blowpipe missiles and machine-gun fire reportedly shot

Despite four weeks at sea, they have been able to carry beavy packs and wrestle Milan missiles and mortars over treacherous ground to the point of attack, military sources said.

Officers assessing the first enfights the British infantry's mobility has been a telling factor. Offen-sive operations in darkness, these officers conceded, have led to some exchanges of fire hetween British troops, with "some casual-ties." But, they said, the company commanders have been able to maintain the tempo of attack.

As two British columns move toward Stanley by the northern and southern approaches, the quality of the Argentine defenders on both routes becomes increasingly important. Intelligence informa-tion from the field during operations is necessarily sketchy, but the first estimates emphasize three this is true, then there is little the attackers will not know about the garrison when the offensive against Stanley begins. One obvious effect of the British air and sea blockade on the garrison is that the defenders are short of food and ammunition, Another effect, more significant for morale, is that they cannot hope for reinforcement to replace a force depleted by casualnes and in some cases by surrender.

British sources acknowledge that some Argentine C-130 transports flying from the mainland probably ran the blockade earlier this month. But they believe that after May 21, when the landings began in the Port San Carlos area, Argentine air supply became im-

Unless the Argentine Air Force is prepared to intervene in strength, the garrison's position is increasingly precarious. The Min-istry of Defense here has reported that Argentina has lost 17 Mirage-3s and 23 A-4 Skyhawks. These two aircraft are Argentina's best and are flown by the best pilots.

Neutral military estimates here are that the Argentines, despite the gallantry of their attacks on British warships and merchantmen during and after the landings, are not now in a position to launch more than sporadic attacks on the British land forces advancing eastward across the island. The landing of the 5th Brigade would provide a better target if the Argentines could muster the planes. But that landing, analysts emphasize, is likely to be made on the east coast of the island, closes to the Harriers from the two air-craft carriers and farther from Argentina's mainland bases. Moreover, the 5th Brigade, like the force landed at San Carlos Bay, will be armed with Blowpipe anti-aircraft missiles and light anti-aircraft many Poles' minds when he warned of a danger of "frarricidal struggle" and urged that the crisis not be allowed to reach a point of national catastrophe. Cheers rose when the bishop demanded that free unions be allowed to function and have their say in determining the economic future of Poland.

"The activities of free, self-governing trade unions are a concrete recognition of the leading role of the working class that has been proclaimed for so many years," he said to laughter that indicated his audience relished the sarcastic dart at a tenet of Communism.

In this region, where under German and Polish rule the miners have remained fervently Catholic unlike urban workers elsewhere, Bishop Bednorz touched a sensitive nerve when he declared: "Our youth has had enough of atheistic education. Their parents demand crosses in the classrooms."

When representatives of various population groups bestowed gifts on the bishop, one brought a cross bearing the Solidarity insignia made by internees in Camp in southeast Poland. "Let us all say, 'God bless the internees," Bishop Bednorz called out, and three times the shout rose.

Archbishop Glemp touched the same theme in a homily, in which he compared the founding of Solidarity in Gdansk in 1980 to the spirit of the Last Supper. "God's spirit was there, and they asked nothing for themselves," the pri-mate said. "They wanted peace, truth and justice."

Strike Plans Set

WARSAW (AP) - Fugitive Solidarity leaders Monday announced plans for a general strike and, apparently changing tactics, called on members of the suspended trade union to abandon previous forms of protest.

The forms of protest action that have been used until now have proved insufficient to force the authorities to back off from repression and pursue the concept of national accord," a leaflet said.

The leaders said a prime demand was freedom for about 2,000 Solidarity activists, including the union leader, Lech Walesa, who has been interned since the imposition of martial law Dec. 13. They added that workers in several large Warsaw factories had asked central leaders to organize a strike.

They said a general strike was planned in Warsaw, as well as in the Wroclaw and Silesia areas. In another development, a pla-que appeared in Warsaw's Victory Square commemorating the deaths of nine miners in clashes with po-lice at a pit in Silesia last Dec. 16.

India Might Seek Wheat Imports to Offset Poor Crop

NEW DELHI - A combination of drought and an unusual wet spell has severely damaged northern India's wheat crop and a leading economist said Monday that the government is considering wheat imports to make up for the

The independent economist, Balraj Mehta, said in the Tribune newspaper that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's administration was likely to undertake a "quiet operation" to arrange the purchase. Last year, India bought 1.5 million metric tons of wheat from the United States, ending a four-year record of self-sufficiency in grain production A government spokesman said that talk of wheat imports was pre-mature but admitted heavy losses in the current crop. "We have lost at least 1.5 to 2 million tons of wheat," the spokesman said.

He added that wheat production this year was originally set for 39 million tons but said it would drop to last year's level of about 37 mil

Despite NATO Entry, Spain Says It Will Not Support U.K. in Crisis

MADRID — One day after it entered the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Spain declared Monday that it was not allied with Britain in the Falkland Islands

"Spain is allied to England in the context of defending democra-cy," said José Pedro Perez Llorca, cy," said José Pedro rece continue foreign minister. "It is absolutely not allied to England in the lately not allied to England in the Malvinas." Argentina calls the disputed islands the Malvinas.

This dual sense of belonging not contradictory," the foreign minister added. "It is something we will bring to the alliance and will make it [NATO] take a more positive attitude to our sister nations in Latin America.

The 16th Member

At Funchal on the Portuguese island of Madeira, Joseph Luns, NATO's secretary-general, who is attending the spring session of the North Atlantic Assembly, said Sunday that all NATO countries remain firmly behind Britain in its battle with Argentina for the Falk-land Islands, but that alliance de-fenses have been weakened by the conflict. The assembly brings to-gether legislators from NATO countries to discuss the alliance's

"The countries of the alliance are unanimous in their support of Britain," Mr. Luns said. "It goes without saying that NATO's de-fenses have been weakened by British ships' being moved to the South Atlantic, but it is not a world crisis and can be overcome

Spain became the 16th member of NATO on Sunday. It brings to the alliance strategic naval bases, a modern air force and a 255,000member army.

Spain has been consistent in its position on the Falklands, saying that Argentina should have sovereignty over the islands and denouncing British "colonialism" an allusion to Britain's continued hold on Gibraltar, at Spain's southernmost tip. However, Spain has also opposed the Argentine military invasion of the Falklands and has called instead for a negotiated settlement,

Spain's accession to NATO took most Spaniards by surprise and prompted protests on all sides. News of Spain's formal accession broke in Madrid only late Saturday night in a terse Foreign Office statement. The youth wing of the opposition Socialist Party accused Premier Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo on Monday of pushing Spain into NATO through the back door.

Critics of Government

The usually pro-government daily Diario 16, in a withering editoripublished Monday, criticized the government for concluding Spain's entry in an undignified fi-nal "sprint." The editorial asked whether the speed was a result of government fears of a Socialist motion presented just 48 hours earlier to postpone NATO mem-bership because of the Falklands crisis and the Gibraltar question.

The Socialists, who campaigned against entry into NATO last year, called for a parliamentary debate before the NATO summit meeting that is to start in Bonn June 9.

The independent daily El Pais said Monday that NATO member-ship did not have total support in in and that the country, with its traditional links to Latin America, was now caught in a cross fire because of the Falklands crisis.

3 Held in Slaving Of Salvador Mayor

SAN SALVADOR - Salvadoran authorities are holding three men in the sixth slaying of a Christian Democratic mayor this year, a party spokesman said. At least three men wearing hoods dragged Angelica García de López, 44, and her daughter, 18 from their house Friday and shot them, the spokesman said Sunday. Mr. Garcia de López was mayor of San Francisco Chinameca, 19 miles (30 kilometers) southeast of

Of the assailants, the spokesman said, "One was a civil defenseman, but the other two were linked to the [National] Guard - we are sure of it." Civil defense personnel, mostly peasants armed by the military to provide security in rural areas, repeatedly have been linked to rightist "death squads" held re-sponsible for thousands of slayings of political moderates and suspected guerrilla sympathizers.

Schmidt Predicts U.S.-Soviet Summit

Mr. Schmidt also said that he could not foresee West European countries becoming a "third force" between the United States and the Soviet Union, and that West European countries need the alliance with North America because of the strength of the Soviet Union.

Russia to Allow Journalist to Leave

MOSCOW -- One of a group of Soviet citizens on a hunger strike to press for permission to join spouses in the West was advised Monday that he would be allowed to emigrate.

Andrei Frolov, 51, a journalist, was notified by telephone during a meeting with foreign journalists on his 22d day into the fast. Other members of the group burst into applause at the news.

The self-styled members of the "divided families group" launched their hunger strike on May 10, after an extensive campaign of appeals and letters to Soviet government officials and agencies proved futile.

They have declared the intention to "strike to the death" if need be. Mr. Frolov, who married an American woman while she was a student here, had been told his departure "would not fit the interest of the state."

Anti-War Song

The official ambivalence often seems to reflect the domioant attitude among the majority of Russians, who share a genuine fear of another war after the devastation of World War II but can turn hostile when they sense that their security is threatened.

Earlier in May, veterans bedecked with medals gathered across Moscow to celebrate the anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany. Yuri M. Balandin, 62, once a sergeant on the German front, was one of the thousands who gathered in front of the Bolshoi Theater. He fondly remembered the Americans he had met on the Elbe River 40 years earlier as "wonderful people," and be pointed with unfergred emotion to a blue sky "clear of enemy planes."

When the talk turned to current U.S.-Soviet relations, his tone abruptly changed. "Tell that warmonger Reagan that if anybody starts war, we're ready," he said.

That mood was captured in the words of a popular song that was being suog by another cluster of veterans: "We're peaceful people. But

That evening, thousands of youths flowed into a city center closed to traffic. Several, with a guitarist, quickly attracted a large crowd when they launched into a Russian version of "Ain't Gonna Study War No More," with the additional refrain "and we won't take our oath."

The theme of pacifism, of resistance to military service, struck a jarring oote against the background of veterans heavy with medals and difficult memories. The youths' song, accompanied by furtive glances, seemed as tacitly rebelliuus as the ban-the-bomb logos proliferating on Moscow walls alongside the initials of favorite sports teams.

Impressive Numbers

The Komsomol youths, the veterans and the pacifists are all strands of a national mood that combines an ardent yearning for peace and a menacing insecurity and distrust. There is an older generation unable to furget World War II and the years of averwhelming U.S. military superiority, there is the conviction that survival de-pends on constant vigilance, and there is a younger generation dabhling with pacifism as one aspect of a more general malaise. Contributing to the mood is a preoccupation with peace in Soviet propaganda that often verges on obsession.

Mir - "peace" - is by far the most heavily taxed word in the Soviet propaganda lexicon. It is endlessly repeated in outdoor hanners, in newspapers, in the titles of committees and councils, as the focus of rallies.

Behind the publicity lies a peace apparatus that can marshal impressive numbers, eveo by Soviet standards. The official state-supported Soviet Peace Committee says it has 80 million members. A Communist Youth League letterwriting campaign against the deployment of new U.S. medium range missiles in Western Europe has drawn more than 8 million letters.

The tactics of Soviet peace propagandists abroad have led to expulsions and charges of clandestine payments to Western anti-war groups. Whether such measures have seriously influenced Western peace movements is open to question, but at home the propaganda has evi-dently fallen oo fertile ground. Americans traveling through the Soviet Union are constantly beset with assurances that Soviet people want peace, with the insinuation — often - that Washington, and specifically President Reagan, are the exclusive formenters of the arms race and of the threat of nuclear annihilation.

Such perceptions are reinforced through daily commentaries in the Soviet press and oo television, contrasting "peace-loving" Soviet disarma-ment propusals and other "peace initiatives" to the devious, militaristic state of mind attributed to Mr. Reagan.

Soviet officials seem to have become concerned that the peace cumpaign may be proving too successful and contributing to the spread of pacifist tendencies among Soviet youth. On this score, official attitudes are unambivalent: Pacifism is fine for export, but not for domestic consumption.

In January, Pravda carried an enthusiastic editorial that hailed the anti-war movement in Western Europe as "the vital cause of the peoples." The same newspaper had earlier declared that "our propaganda must decisively rid itself of the traces of pacifism that are occasionally to be found in some instructional or propaganda materials."

More recently, the Soviet chief of staff, Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, wrote in a pamphlet that there must be a resolute struggle against complacency and elements of pacifism."

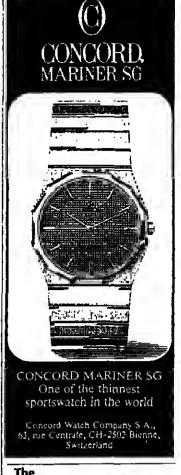

Despite such expressions of anxiety, there is no evidence that Soviet-style pacifism is anything similar in scope or content to the Western peace movement. It is a trend among youths who tend to imitate Western styles of all sorts and who are increasingly cynical about the inflexible dogma of their elders.

The official opposition to pacifism has been matched by the Soviet aversion to any spontaneous manifestation of anti-war feelings. All peace rallies are carefully orchestrated, and the theme is invariably support for Soviet policies and denunciation of Western warmongering. Any suggestion that the Soviet Union is also responble for the arms race is resolutely rejected.

Seven foreigners who tried last month to unfurl a hand-lettered banner in Red Square that read "Bread, Life and Disarmament" quickly learned that such actions are forbidden. They were bundled off by security agents within two minutes of starting their demonstration.

The Other Arms Race

The spectacle of American-, French-, West German- and Israeli-made weapons' being used against British forces in the South Atlantic is a vivid reminder that the production of conventional arms is the world's leading growth industry. In the last decade, the yearly volume of transfers of such arms to other nations more than doubled. The fraction going to Third World nations nearly tripled.

There was an even more dramatic shift in the kinds of weapons being transferred. As the 1970s opened, arms sales and grants were largely of surplus or obsolete weapons. As the decade closed, the most sophisticated weapons rolling of production lines were being transferred, sometimes even before being deployed in the seller's own forces; in only one region, Latin America, were all suppliers exercising a measure of technological restraint. That barrier fell this year when the Reagan administration decided to sell F-16s to Venezuela — the first advanced supersonic fighters to be sold on the continent.

Arms sellers perennially have sought to gain political favor in return for their wares. But as the Russians discovered in Egypt, China, Somalia and elsewhere, and as the United States learned in Iran, such relationships are unpredictable. When one supplier ends ap supplying rival countries, frequently the result is greater friction with both.

The expectation of gaining leverage over recipients' policies has also generally been frustrated. More often, the recipient seems to hold the upper hand: It can threaten to buy elsewhere or brand a reluctant supplier as unreliable. Third World nations with the means buy from as many nations as possible. The ultimate refinement of this tactic is to split purchases between Communist suppliers, as India and Iraq have done. When fighting breaks out, suppliers' problems multiply. With so many countries selling to so many recipients, it is impossible to predict against whom a weapon will eventually be fired. With an especially effective weapon - like the French Exocet missile that the Argentines have battle tested - this can prove embarrassing, at the least. The choice of whether to continue the delivery of the arms during a conflict forces a supplier into taking sides when its political interests may require staying neutral.

Presenting the Reagan administration's new arms transfer policy last year, Undersecretary of State James Buckley described the principal purpose of arms transfers as "not to help a particular regime but to buttress our own security" through the global projection of American power. He stressed that the policy would steer a "prudent, middle course" and dismissed projections of large increases in military sales as "simply unfounded." Sales in 1982, he predicted. would remain approximately where they are today, namely at the $15-billion level."

As it turns out, the Pentagon now predicts that foreign military sales in 1982 will reach $25 billion. Allowing for the usual underestimate, and including grant aid and commercial sales, the total could top $30 billion. Yet even that amount - way above the previous high of $17.7 billion — is apparently not enough. National Security Adviser Clark has called for "some steady growth" in security assistance. He pictured U.S. arms in foreign hands as "a real complement to our own force structure" and outlined a "priority effort" to accelerate the sales process and to remove congressional limits on it.

Accelerated U.S. sales may well be matched, if not exceeded, by the Soviet Union and by other Western suppliers. Fancy, sophisticated arms do not cause wars. But they can make them more probable and more destructive. They cost vast amounts of moncy - more than enough to stifle economic development in poor countries. THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Strange Match: France and U.S.

PARIS — President François Mitterrand, host at this week's Versailles economic summit conference, has brought about a quiet, and unexpected, change in French foreign policy during his first year in office.

His predominantly Socialist administration, with four Commu-nists in the Cabinet, is on better terms with the United States than any French government since President de Gaulle took his forces out of NATO a generation ago.

Iromically, it isn't points for the French to say so out loud. And, of course, there are profound differences in the philosophy inspiring Paris and Washington now. But there is more in common on East-West strategic issues and more practical cooperation on defense between the two than has been the case for a long time.

There remains no question but that France will refuse to rein-tegrate its forces in the alliance command or to abandon its complete independence of military de-cision. But its leaders have come to merely possible, that French forces would join in defending West Germany against attack and that France would probably serve as a rear area for reinforcements and supplies from the United States in the event of a European war.

Things have not reached the point yet of specific planning be-tween France and the United States on how this might be done. but they are heading in that direction. This is of the greatest importance because a major weakness in NATO strategy has been the lack of territorial depth to bolster logistics for conventional defenses on the central front.

If the trend develops, it could lead to a shifting assessment of how long NATO could resist an assault before feeling that it was obliged to consider the use of nuclear weapons.

France firmly supports the NATO decision to deploy medium-range missiles in Europe unless the Soviets remove their missiles was also the policy of former Presi-dent Giscard d'Estaing, but there have been doubts about how a Socialist government would view the East-West balance.

Now the judgment in Paris is that there may be general parity between Soviet and U.S. strategic forces globally, but not in Europe. The French position is that there must be restoration of balance, at the lowest level possible, but that if cuts cannot be negotiated then U.S. missiles should be added.

Meanwhile, French relations with the Soviets have grown cold. Far from the Gaullist stand that France should be a bridge between East and West, the policy is that good French relations with the United States are a prerequisite for better relations with the Russians.
Mitterrand has made a dizzying series of foreign trips, but he has not been to Moseow and has no current plans to go.

A year before he was elected, he said that "nothing disposes me to postulate the necessity of the Atlantic alliance, and I would be satisfied with a situation that would make it defunct." During the cam-paign he repeatedly called for a ba-sic review of the alliance and at-tacked "both blocs." On Amity major change in Sino-Mongolian affairs, affecting Sino-Soviet ties.

The sudden emergence of friendly contacts between the Chinese and French Communist parties last winter is significant in light of the French party's fidelity in following Moscow's line. An ex-change of visits as well as a favor-implication of strengthening rather than diluting the partnership. There is good personal rapport between Mitterrand and President Reagan, who will spend two days in Paris before the seven-nation summit. "He shows good will and I can talk to bim," the French president says of Reagan, "He's not closed to discussion. It permits hope. Of course, his political theory is far from mine."

The most divisive issues between France and the United States now are bow to deal with the world economic crisis and North-South relations. France refuses to go along with Washington's demand to cut down sharply on trade and credits for Moscow. "We are not at war with the Soviets, we don't believe in a blockade," Mitterrand told American reporters. But, he added, the West should be "prudent" in delivering technology.

There has also been rapprochement on the Middle East and Africa. Not only has Mitterrand re-nounced the grandiose gestures and rhetorical "initiatives" favored by his predecessors, he supports the Camp David treaty and his government is talking with Israel about arms supplies.

This shift on the Middle East is considered one reason for the re-cent outbreak of terrorist attacks against the French, believed to be commanded by Syria. Mitterrand has ordered a counteroffensive on terrorism which presumably means that French security agents are au-thorized to hit back, Israeli-style.

On Africa, change appears to have come more from Washington than Paris, with Reagan accepting the French argument that good re-lations with leftist governments on that continent help to reduce Soviet influence rather than enhance it.

Even where there is flat disapreement, as on Central America. it does not seem to be abrasive. This is a strange match, Socialist France and conservative America, but it is working better than any-

WASHINGTON — Next to taxes and So-cial Security, hinle attracts more atten-tion in this city than the question of foreign trade. Any time the House or Senate holds a hearing on import competition, scores of lob-byists line up in the corridors, ready to scram-hle for the few available seats.

Trade also will be one of the preoccupations this week at the Versailles summit, where heads of state usually sweet-talk each other about the need for avoiding protectionism. Nonetheless each is pressed by political forces to subsidize, labor at home more than an even break. The underlying concerns are very basic - jobs and profits. And at a time of recession, feelings run deep. A main focus these days is whether Japan is taking unfair advantage of the relative openness of U.S. markets while refusing American and other foreign manufacturers equivalent access to its own very successful economy. Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suziki is ou the verge of unveiling a plan for new, but unde-fined, trade liberalization measures for consideration at the summit in Paris, designed to soften some of the deep-seated criticism of his government evident in the United States and in Europe. But few believe such measures can dull the Japanese competitive edge in this decade. One of the most significant - and underplayed — news stories of recent weeks was General Motors' decision to abandon plans for a new small car competitive with Japanese By Hobart Rowen pacts annually from Isuzu Motors beginning in 1984. That is probably good for GM, but in abandoning a struggle for this important sector of the market, it is a serious blow to workers in U.S. auto and parts-supply industries.

Not too long ago, angry Milwaukee workers—saying that the Japanese had "stolen" their jobs—hauled down a Japanese flag, run up as a courtesy to Japanese businessmen visiting a local engine plant. Some unions actively discourage purchases by their members of Japanese cars or other products. According to the New York Times, the United Auto Workers parking los in Detroit posts a sign warning un-ion members to "Park Your Import in Tokyo."

The battle rages on in Japan in similar emo-tional fashion, At the end of April, 8,000 Japanese farmers descended on Tokyo to protes any liberalization of import quotas on food products, as demanded not only by U.S. negotiators, but by Japanese industrialists seeking to appease American complaints.

Marching to the American Embassy in Tokyo, the farmers chanted, in English: "No more bod - no more oranges!"

The problem is — as everyone knows — that American agriculture is much more efficient than Japanese agriculture. American farms can produce rice — the staple of the Japanese diet for about one-sixth of the cost in Japan. Therefore, the Japanese agricultural lohby, a powerful influence on the ruling Liberal Democratic Party, resists more generous beef and citrus quotas, fearing that rice will be next. Suzuki's summit package will contain little, if any, relief on the agricultural side.

Despite the high food prices Japanese consumers must pay as a consequence of this weak sumers must pay as a consequence of this pro-tection, there is little organized opposition to the powerful Japanese farm lobby. The LDP has discouraged a strong consumer movement—thus, there are no Japanese Ralph Naders. Japan and other nations, of course, must be pressured to drop protectionist devices. But as Massachusetts Senator Paul E. Tsongas, a Democrat, has observed, focusing exclusively on everything that Japan does wrong distracts us from the real issue: the loss of the American competitive instinct.

Tsongas notes that Japan now graduates more engineers than does the United States. (The United States produce more lawyers.) Overall, there is a declining American commitment to higher education. Tsongas also correctly points an accusing finger at the "American tradition of confrontation between management and labor." In Ja-pan, as in West Germany, business and labor cooperate and meet periodically with their national government to set realistic wage and price targets. We must also move in this direction, putting aside irrational fears of longrange economic planning. Planning is not Socialism, it is not regimentation. Planning is an exercise in self-preservation: Without it. America can become a second-rate industrial power.

that it posed no serious threat to China's security. By equating the two super-powers as "hegemonists," China, increases its flexibility in moving between them and makes it poss ble to seek a global united front on behalf of the Third World.

China appears to have decided to increase its options by downgrading its relationship with America, improving its relationship with the Soviet Union and reasserting its role as a Third World country. The Taiwan issue is a contributing but not casual factor. True, the Reagan administration chose the worst time to announce continuation of co-production of the F-5E jet in Taiwan, but Peking's shift in treatment of the superpowers and revival of the Third World theme predated the announcement. Regarding your editorial "Vio-lence on Television" (IHT, May 13). The naive approach you take to the problem of violence surprises me. It is ridiculous to assume the networks would ever voluntarily reduce the content of one of their most powerful appeals in what is an extremely commercial enterprise.

Nor is government regulation the answer as I do not believe the violent content of American television is the real problem in like behavior of children. The sheer volume and popularity of television has made it a drug. When children devote so much time to television, they lose a sense of balance in the real world and begin living in and believing in a fantasy world where solutions are simple and results are easily gained with a gun.

The solution, which may ap-pear radical but is necessary, is to simply halt all emission for two or three days a week, say Tuesday and Thursday. This would be enough to break the addictive pattern. As the situation stands, people are incapable of doing without television. The days without television would create a time for people to interact with each other. If children spent more time talking to their parents and in common activity they would have a better sense of reality and television would cease to be an overriding influence and return to Romanian dissidents in Paris believe that Romanian agents killed Mr. Tanase in France rather that attempting to spirit him out of the country, according to Milmes Berinder, a friend of Mr. Tanase and member of the League for the Defense of Human Rights in Romania.

"It's still possible to hope he will turn up, but after so long, without any, word, the worst seems likely," Mr. Berindei said Monday by tele-phone. He and other dissidents beieve Mr. Tanase was liquidated to instimidate other Romanians tempted to criticize President Ni-colae Cennescu.

The Romanian Embassy has refused to comment on Mr. Tanase's disappearance. Romanian diplomats in Brussels tried last weekend to prevent Belgian television from broadcasting a prere-corded program with Mr. Tanese.

The French government has not publicly accused the Romanian government while it quietly explored the possibilities of saving Mr. Tanase in contacts with the Romanian authorities, according to several French officials who declined to be identified because of the government's policy of silence on the matter.

Lack of Proof

In addition, these officials said. the French government lacks any proof of Romanian government in-volvement that could justify public accusations.

These sources dismissed suggestions that Mr. Tanase might have been slain because he was involved in espionage. Shortly after his disappearance, the government-owned news service, Agence France-Presse, carried an unsourced allegation that Mr. Tanase was an informer for France's counterespionage service, the DST.

French officials, denying that Mr. Tanase's involvement with the DST exceeded the routine contacts of a political émigré, surmised that the report was planted at the news agency to discredit Mr. Tanasc and divert attention from his political role as a vocal critic of the Romanian regime.

Mr. Tanase, 37, a novelist and theater director, had been living in exile in France since 1977. He contributed to Radio Free Europe broadcasts beamed at Romania

Last year, Romania joined Poland and Czechoslovakia in Eastern Europe's club of big debtors. Its total obligations to 213 Western banks are estimated at more than $10 billion, and Bucharest is having difficulty obtaining a rescheduling of the $2.3 billion it owed last year and this year.

The removal on May 21 of Premier Ilie Ver-det, along with seven aides, was Mr. Ceausescu's way of acknowledging Romania's eco-nomic difficulties since, in the East European dialectic, it is almost always "the government" - hardly ever the Communist Party - that is held responsible for failures of industry and

She was reassigned, bowever, to the State Planning Commission, where, given Romania's persistent economic problems, meditation could come in handy.

TM Crackdown Affected 400

BUCHAREST (AP) — About 400 Romanians were fired or demoted in the aftermath of a crackdown on a Transcendental Meditation group, informed sources said Monday.
Officials have contended that the TM organization operated by Nicolae Stoian, a former electronics engineer, and his Swiss wife was a "mysue seet" aimed at infiltrating Romanian society and possibly gathering sensitive information. The Stoians were expelled list winter.

The dismissals of the education minister,
Aneta Spornic, and two of her deputies were reported in the official media. Although neither she nor the deputies were actually members of the organization, they were said to have given formal approval to a Romanian emigrant to carry out "psychology research" and teach "relaxation of body and soul" through

Iran and Iraq reported air strikes and long-range artillery duels on their embattled border and the United Nations Security Council scheduled private consulations Monday on ways to resolve the 20-month-old war.

Papal Mediation Sought in Vatican Labor Deadlock

United Press International
VATICAN CITY --- Vatican lay employees have asked Pope John Paul II to personally mediate a labor dispute that brought about the first protest march in the Vatican history and threatens to cause its first strikes.

The Association of Vatican Lay Employees, which numbers about 2,000. Thursday sent a letter to the Vatican secretariat of state asking that the pope intervene to break an impasse in talks with Vatican ad-ministrators, sources said Monday. On May 3, about 1,000 associa-non members marched silently for about a half a mile inside the Vatican to show their solidarity for union representatives negotiating new contracts.

At the time, the association threatened to hold two-bour strikes at the start of every work shift if an agreement in principle was not reached by May 31. The deadline was later extended to the middle of June because of the pope's current trip to Britain and and Switzerland later in June.

A communiqué from Iran's Join: Chiefs of Staff said Iraqi and Iranian forward positions were locked in long-range artillery duels on Sunday across the Shatt-al-Arab waterway, the 120-mile (193kilometer) estuary that forms part of their common border.

Saudi Arabia and its five partners in the Gulf Cooperation Council, after their second emergency foreign ministers' meeting on the war in two weeks, called for a unified Arab stand as a basic requirement for peace in the conflict. The council members, including Qatar, Bahrain, Oman, and the United Arab Emirates, are increas-

The Last Charge of Bobby Baker

By Henry Allen

Washington Pon Service
WASHINGTON —The American Express card: Don't go broke without it.

Robert G. (Bobby) Baker sure didn't. Baker, a former whiz-kid Senate aide and Lyndon Johnson protégé convicted in 1967 of larceny, fraud, in-come-tax evasion and conspiracy, filed for bankruptcy. He claimed $384,955 in debts, including $72,000 owed to American Express.

That's right: $72,000 to American Express, the same people who never seem to let one nickel slide from mouth to month, the writers of all those letters designed to administer psychological kneecap-pings, and the employers of squadrons of teleone enforcers who come on like a combination of your ailing mother and a middle linebacker until they get their money.

"All of that $72,000 is pending since 1980, and it's from charges incurred in 1979 and 1980, according to the schedules filed by Baker," says bankruptcy attorney Brian Seeber, who has been appointed trustee of the proceedings. "Baker lists $72,000 approximately, and says that the claim is

Pending for two years! And approximately! After all those calls and letters, isn't the exact amount burned into Baker's prefrontal cortex like a cattle

"It's remarkable," says Seeber. "I doo't recall a debt to American Express that high. Most people would have been sued long ago. But Baker states that he is not being sued by American Express." Informed that American Express refused to comment on this particular case, Seeber said: "I wouldn't talk about it either if somebody owed me 72 grand."

The average cardholder is curious, nonetheless. How did Baker, who gained ultimate noteriety as a convicted feloo, talk them into letting him run the debt that high and lone?

"There is no preset spending limit on the American Express card. The limit oo charges is determined by income, ability to pay back and our pre-vious experience with you," says a company

But what if the eye of the average cardholder is caught by, say, a Rolls-Royce Corniche, which is worth in the neighborhood of what Baker owes? "You'd have a problem, there," says the spokes-

Spokeswoman Nancy Muller explains that there may be no preset limit, but in fact there's "a formula" for determining what a cardholder, such as Bobby Baker, could charge. But the formula is "not anything that we make public. ft's a very sophisticated authorization system. And Baker is a very sophisticated guy.

"You're thinking that there's some special dispensation, but it's not true," says Muller. "As a rule, as a general rule, there are no special cases." Then why hasn't American Express sued? Is it possible that in some cases, American Express doesn't do anything to collect? "We don't not do anything," Muller is quick (and loud) to state, "There are a thousand and one reasons why we might out have sued. Frequently we try many other ways. Usually you can say "I can work something out with you. I'm expecting a check from my Aunt Tilly or my last employer. People will say these kind of things and if we believe they're sincere, we can work something out." Sincere is what Bobby Baker bas always sounded, but how can American Express make sure that Aunt Tilly's check gets endorsed over to them? There are some sorts of means of getting it. I don't know what they are and I don't want to say." But short of suing, it's all just words. How are you going in scare Bobby Baker, Lyndon Johnson's onetime golden boy, and doer of hard time, with a bunch of words? How can you scare anybody?

There's a delinquency charge of 2½ percent, or $10, whichever is larger." Muller warns, adding in a tone of particular gravity: "After 30 days you can lose your card.

As it bappens, Muller has just checked the computer for the word on one Robert G. Baker, but hasn't come up with anything. She will reveal that much about this sad case.

Is it possible that Baker owes nothing on his American Express card? That he filed this as part of his bankruptcy because he's playing for public sympathy, trying in turn himself inin the Robin flood of consumer credit? Or is he merely assuming that to be alive is to be in trouble with American Express?

In any case, imagine the television advertising possibilities; we see a shot of a guy with a vaguely familiar face standing in front of the Capitol and saying: "You don't know me."

Neither, apparently, did American Express.

A Gander at Duty-Free Shoppers

By Andrew H. Malcolm New York Times Service

GANDER, Newfoundland — The Cubans are crazy for gum," said Shirley McIlmoyl, They don't just buy a pack or two. They buy a whole box.

McIlmoyl has a detailed knowledge of the shopping traits of Cu-bans — and Germans, Scandinavians, Russians and Americans. She runs the duty-free store at the international airport in Gander, perched on the eastern tip of North America, where every year hundreds of thousands of people stop by for 25 or 30 minutes.

Gander is a very popular place for pilots who happen to run short of fuel over the North Atlantic or who see No. 4 engine erupt in flame over the vast uninhabited wilds of Labrador, halfway be-tween Rome and Los Angeles.

Because jet engines do not break down on a schedule, there is little warning when 300 or 400 guests will suddenly drop in. So Mrs. McIlmoyl pass in 16-hour days, keeps her store open 24 hours a day 365 days a year, and has five other women on 15-minute call.

Modest Purchases

"It's nothing for us to handle 250 customers in 25 minutes," she said. If things break right, she could have planeload following planeload all day and do perhaps $5,000 worth of business in 24 hours, although $1,500 is more

Her busy season is about to start. "We get the Oslo and Copen-hagen flights oo their way home." said McIlmoyl, "And they are the top spenders." American customers are always looking for gifts, essuch as furry seals and Indian

The Communists have the least money, McIlmoyl observed, Many buy a 30-cent pack of chewing gum as their gift to take home.

"It makes you appreciate what we have," she said: The Comminists are also quite struck by the girlie" magazines, as McIlmoyl calls the publications she keeps in the back corner.

In April, Mrs. McIlmoyl noticed one Cuban apparently so enraptured by the magazines that she had to warn him that his flight was departing.

"No go, no go," he said. And McIlmoyl recorded her first defector. The Mounties led him away to a new life in Canada.

On the other hand, one New York man flies to Gander every few weeks for a couple of boxes of Cuban cigars, 25 for $85. Sales of these are illegal in the United

Now for almost half a century Gander International Airport has made a rather tidy living not from being a destination in its own right but from being on the way to somewhere, anywhere, else.

Russian fishing crewmen stop bere on the way home. Small private American jets stop here on the way to a long weekend in Europe. Scandinavian charter jets stop here on the way to Miami or en route home from Los Angeles. East German soccer teams stop here on the way to Cuba. Minno-apolis schoolgiris stop here on the way to France's château country. "Gander is a great alternate," said Maj. Dale Stevens, a U.S. Air craft here rather than try to fly five more hours to Pope Air Force Base in North Carolina with his right wing on fire.

Force pilot who landed his cargo

Key Traffic Control Point

Gander, 30 square miles of federal forest along the great-circle route between Europe and North America, is also a military communications base and a key air traffic control point, as shown by last fall's controller walkouts here that paralyzed transatiantic flying.

The airport was built by the British in 1936 as a refueling point, preceding the nearby dependent town of 13,000 by almost 20 years. During World War II, Gander handled 300 flights a day, mostly supplies and bombers for Britain Nowadays, 40 or 50 flights is a busy day. Each one pays 50 cents per thousand pounds for the privilege of landing, or about $150 for a DC-8 and $350 for a 747.

But the fewer planes carry more people, a total of about 800,000 a year, nearly four times previous business. The growth and the air-port's 1,800 jobs are attributed largely to an international promo-tion of Gander as a kind of turnpike rest plaza for planes.

"Tve seen very many changes," said Jack James, Gander's 63-yearold general manager, who helped build the place as a young man. Where once there was only woods now there are two runways, a control tower and nine gates sur-rounded by woods and a climate that, although fog-free more than some coastal enclaves, is more conducive to rust than sunburn.

4 Paintings Taken In Detroit Theft

The Associated Press DETROIT - The theft of four 17th-century Dutch and Flemish paintings from the Detroit Institute of Arts may have been the work of insiders, according to the musemm's chief of security.

Adolph L. Smith said Sunday that alarms would have sounded if . someone had broken into the building at night, and strangers would have been questioned during museum business hours.

The four paintings - discovered missing Friday - are "A Woman weeping," attributed to Rem-brandt; "Laughing Boy," by Frans Hals; "View on the Sheldt," by Aelbert Cryp; and "St. Michael," by a Flemish artist, Lucas Fran-chows the Younger choys the Younger.

Museum officials said the thieves apparently removed ventilation grates between a closet and a temporary storage room. The frames were removed and the small paintings were taken out by the same route, bypassing an elec-tronic alarm and locking system.

Iron is one of man's oldest materials. But blacksmiths who heat and hammer and weld it into shape are conservative fellows, constantly imitating what the oldtimers did. New materials and new technology left them floundering in the old ways.

> "By the 1970s," Pearce-Higgins says, "blacksmithing in Britain had reached a low ebb. The craft was static."

But in Germany, Italy and espe-cially in the United States there were men - and even blacksmithmenting with iron, attempting to give it new forms appropriate to the tastes and attitudes of our own time," she said.

These men and women saw no reason not to use iron as a unique raw material for sculpture. They set out to give modern forms to traditional iroo objects like gates and fire screens. They proved that even jewelry could be made of it. in short, they treated blacksmithing as an art.

L ONDON — For a costly new L production of "Swan Lake"
at the Coliseum, London Festival Ballet director John Field has come up with several fresh thoughts in choreography, and a new twist to the story. Here it is Prince Siegfried who is under thrall in the villainous von Rothbart, who magics up both the swan ladies, Odette and Odile, to lure the prince in his doom. It is not quite clear why this should be, although voo Rothbart is first seen as a sinister courtier in the first act, when he is banished by Siegfried's mother for leading her son into dissolute ways when he should be getting himself wed. Later von Rothbart returns to gloat over the queen-mother when he has sprung the trap of Odile at the end of the ballroom scene. Is it just revenge? Or could it signify a bid for the throne? Field has not thought this through as much as he might, so that any possible strengthening of the ballet's dramatic tragedy fizzles out in the last act, the leading characters simply running off stage to their deaths. Here too, the designs by Carl Toms, lavish as to costumes but cumbersome in scenery, fail to secure a convincing ending which Field wanted to be close to the original scenario, with quite different versions in the re-pertones of British companies, in-cluding the two royal companies (each with a separate production since last winter) and Scottish Ballet. Yet the challenge is such that if all the best features of these were put together it still would oot make an ideal "Swan Lake."

In any case, however ingenious the storytelling, the ballet still depends for success on the dancing association with the immortal Tchaikovsky music. Festival Ballet has a new music director in the Belgian-born Charles Vanderzand, whose first-night conducting of this production was at times discoocerting in both tempo and slow, but if this was to accommodate the dancers they did not often look any better for it; sometimes

Several Casts

The first of several casts was led by the former Paris ballerina, Evelyne Desutter, with distinction of classical style more in her Odette than as Odile. She was followed by Andria Hall, stronger in bravura well as dramatic character. Their respective princes were Jay Jolley and Ben van Cauwenbergh, both personable and expressive, with assured if not always very polished dancing.

Italian newcomers Renata Calderini and Maurizio Bellezza were excellent in a new pas de six chore-ographed by Michael Pink to the first-act waltz, and Matz Skoog outshone both his female partners in the familiar pas de trois. The character dances in the ballroom scene are all newly staged by Maria Fay, with variable results, and Field's own choreography for the last act will benefit from further profits for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982, the country's two leading seamless steel pipe makers, Sumitomo Metal Industries and Nippon Kokan, showed record profits, analysts said Monday.

Nippon Steel reported a 34.8-percent drop in operating profit to 114 billion yen ($470 million), its first decline in four years. Kawasaki Steel reported a decline of 23 percent to 70.6 billion yen, and Kobe Steel had a fall of 24.7 percent to 30.7 billion yen. fall of 34.2 percent to 30.2 billion yen.

Sumitomo's operating profit rose 16.8 percent to 106 billion yen and that of Nippon Kokan was up 9 percent to 70.2 billion yen. The analysts said this was the result of a surge in export volume and the price of seamless pipe.

Mitsubishi Motors Profit Up 58%

TOKYO — Mitsubishi Motors said Monday its 58.2-percent profit increase in the year ended March 31 was mainly the result of a foreign exchange gain arising from the yen's depreciation against the U.S. dollar. The project is the planned 3,700-mile (5,920kilometer) pipeline that would carry Soviet natural gas from Siberia to Western Europe. The Soviet Union plans to order as much as $15 billion of heavy machinery and steel pipe for it.

U.S. Retailers Look for a Midsummer Upturn

By Isadore Barmash New York Times Service

NEW YORK - U.S. retailers' hopes are rising for a gradual improvement in sales and earnings, starting in midsummer.

The reasons are moderately imroved sales of clothing and home furnishings in April and May and the expected benefits of a $45-billion addition in buying power from the further reduction of income taxes and higher Social Se-curity benefits, both effective July

Although most retailers expect their third fiscal quarter beginning Aug. 1 to be the period during which these positive factors come together, others are not writing off current quarter.

We are looking for some improvement in the economy in this spending will be the leading edge," said Robert A. Mooney, manager of corporate economics for J.C. Penney. "It's not business spend-ing that will lead us out of the recession because that tends to lag nine to 12 months after consumer spending picks up."

Turn for Better

For almost two months, Associated Dry Goods has found that business has taken a definite turn for the better, observed William P. Arnold, chairman and chief executive officer, "That's a fairly toog period, and it probably means that women will now go out and huy again. The consumer often begins spend us nut of a recession." The hrighter expectations for sales in the second quarter, and es-

Business has been tight for the last six months, and with the decline in oil business in these parts there have been layoffs. In our four toy stores, we have been pushing hard those toys that are most TV advertised and they do move."

But in San Francisco, Victor Alhadeff, president and owner of stores, observed, "The next six months don't look very bright right now People are afraid to buy. Our high-fashion goods are all right but our moderate-priced business has been hurt and our profits are down this year. This has been the worst year so far since I bought this business in 1952. We have had to lay off 20 percent of our staff, or about 24 people,"

In the view of Mr. Mooney, about half of the expected $45 bil-lion in added buying power from lower tax withholding and higher Social Security payments should be spent by consumers and the nther half saved.

By the year's end. said Mr. Robbins, "April will have proven to be the worst month and the March-through-May period will have proven to be the trough. But because of the consumer's growing perception of slower inflation, more real income and a lower deht service burden, I see a slow, steady improvement in the second half and a good Christmas season rela-

Official Seeks Aid For French Firms

PARIS - Nationalized industries in France will need 30 billion francs ($4.9 billion) in state-aided investment over the next two years, according to Pierre Dreyfus, the French industry minister.

In a radio interview Sunday, Mr. Dreyfus said the funds are needed primarily in the steel industry but also are necessary for the chemical and electronics sectors.

The two-year target dwarfed the 9 billion francs allocated for stateowned industries in the 1982 budget — already a level of public bor-rowing that caused an outcry among the heads of France's recently nationalized banks.

Of the 9-billion aid package, two-thirds is to come from loans to the nationalized sectors from the nationalized banks. The rest is to come from an increase in the valne-added tax. Of the 9 billion, steel - Usinor and Sacilor - is to get 4 billion; the metals and chemical gi-ant Pechiney Ugine Kuhlmann is to get 2 billion, and a oumber of electronics companies are to get most of the rest.

Mr. Dreyfus, who headed Renault, the state-owned automaker, before be joined the government last year, said that the budget defi-cit, even with heavy investment, should be kept below President François Mitterrand's target of 3 percent of gross national product.

The government's policy, he said, was not to protect lame-duck enterprises but in modernize French industry so it could compete in the international market. Asked whether his investment target would be accepted by the other French ministers, Drevfus said that he was trying to convince his colleagues that the country needed growing industries to generate budget revenue.

He said that France's steel industry - already heavily in debt to the state - is the most urgent priority for the government, which in nationalizing the industry last year promised to restore it to profitability by 1985. Mr. Dreyfus said that in the

Singaporeans Clear Subway

SINGAPORE — Singapore has announced it will go ahead with construction of a multi-billion dollar urban railway network, to be known as the Mass Rapid Transit.

The weekend announcement, by Minister for Communications Ong Teng Cheong, follows more than 10 years of public debate and feasibility studies costing 10 million Singapore dollars ($4.8 million).

Funds to build the MRT, estimated to cost 5 billion dollars, are to come from the sale of of land reclaimed from the sea fronting the central business district, Mr. Ong said.

The MRT, expected to cover 44 miles (70 kilometers), including 12.5 miles underground, is designed to link all the major housing estates with the business area. Construction is scheduled to begin in 1984 or 1985, when the present labor shortage,

NEW YORK - Orders for new

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The blow that the world sugar futures market had been bracing for since May 5 finally landed Friday, when the price of the July contract plunged 0.42 cent a pound, to 7.80 cents. For the week, the loss was 0.45 cent.

The other deliveries showed somewhat smaller losses for Friday and the week. Each hundredth of a cent is equivalent to $11.20 on each contract of 112,000 pounds.

While the market in foreign sugar had been expecting and absorbing heavy selling since President Reagan ordered the reimposition of import quotas on May 5, the se-verity of last Friday's price break stunned many traders. After all, world sugar futures had already tumbled more than a cent since Mr. Reagan's proclamation.

The independent U.S. cane sugar refiners had sought an injunction against the new quota system, and on Thursday the judge said be would reserve judgment. This also provoked some late selling last

Indicator of Intensity

Another indicator of the intensity of the selling was that volume on New York's Coffee, Sugar and Cocoa Exchange last Friday rose to an estimated 11,000 contracts from 6,100 the day before. Open interest is expected to show a large drop when it is reported Tuesday

"What many longs didn't real-ize, or ignored, was that Tuesday is first ootice day to deliver sugar against the July contract, and the shorts are more than eager to do ooe broker said. "The country is awash in sugar, and the full impact of the new quotas will not be felt for a long time."

What the steady open interest and volume in world sugar futures did not disclose was that the hedging changed rapidly. Many domestic producers, refiners, merchants and other hedgers turned to No. 12 domestic sugar futures on the same

The No. 12 market had been relatively inactive since the import quota system was abandoned in late 1974. Most domestic and foreign hedgers preferred the far more active and thus more liquid No. 11 world futures.

Since May 5. domestic hedgers have been moving into the No. 12 market because its prices are now more in line with values, while the shocked and confused foreign producers and users have rushed into the world futures to protect them-selves from further price declines," noted Erik N. Dunlaevy, sugar an-alyst at Balfour, Maclaine Inc.

Foreign Miscalculation

How distraught the foreign pro-ducers have been was discussed by Nauman Barakat, sugar analyst at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.: "Many foreign traders didn't expect world sugar to break 8 cents and sell at levels not seen since the second half of 1979." Also, he said, many thought the current import quota of 220,000 tons for the period ending June 30 would be revised sharply higher for the third quarter, thus taking some pressure off the surpluses held by foreign producers.

For the first four months of this year, new orders were $660.6 million, down 46 percent from $1.24 billion during the corresponding period last year.

Auto companies account for about 40 percent of the orders in the machine tool industry, and Mr. Eisenberg said that both Ford and Chrysier are expected to place some large orders by the fall. The auto industry was the principal im-petus for creating the last boom in the industry, and it is likely to lead machine tools ont of the latest shimp," Mr. Eisenberg said. The longest steady upswing in machine tool orders occurred between the second quarter of 1958 and the last quarter of 1966, sus-tained by strong orders from the auto industry. A normal healthy period in the industry lasts at least two years, according to Mr. Eisen-

ARA is not unscathed by the economic climate or by the charges and countercharges, often ending in litigation, that tend to plague service industries. Earnings were down last year, and in the past some of the company's expansion plans have been thwarted on anti-largest U.S. operator of food ser-vices and school buses. Among its private lawsuits. far-flung operations are concessions at the Houston Airport and Mount McKinley State Park in Alaska and the school bus program in Los Angeles. The company is also one of the nation's largest operators of nurs-ing homes, trucking lines, periodi-cal distribution services and health care services, including the medical facilities in the state prisons of Al-abama, Illinois, Iowa and Georgia.

ARA is preparing to pay $45 million in cash for Means Services Inc., a Chicago uniform and laundering service, once antitrust objections are overcome with the sale by Means of three units whose markets overlap ARA's. The move would make ARA the nation's largest renter of uniforms.

In January, the company bought Educare Child Care Centers Inc., a Memphis-based concern that operates 14 day-care centers in Tennessee. Under its expansion program, ARA says, it is adding child-care centers at a rate of nearly one a

The company, with headquarters on four floors of the old Curtis Publishing building in Philadel-phia's historic district, was started in 1959 as a combination of the Chicago vending operations of its chairman, William S. Fishman, with those of Henry and Davre

Davidson in Southern California. Two years later, ARA began to diversify, purchasing Slater Food Service in Philadelphia. As it grew in the next two decades, the company had various brushes with federal regulators, former employees and competitors who have taken ARA to court on such charges as monopolistic business tactics.

Over the years ARA has paid substantial fines for antitrust violations and has been ordered to dispose of certain businesses. It trucking unit that ARA bought for

In one, a former FBI agent who beaded the company's security division filed a suit charging that ARA had dismissed him because he learned too much about illegal activities of ARA officials. He charged in the suit that ARA had tried to cover up illegal payoffs and dealings with underworld fig-

In the end, ARA settled for $250,000 out of court "because of the expense and the impact the suit would have had on management's time," said Harry Bellinger, an ARA spokesman. As for the other charges of illegality, Mr. Bellinger said: "The company categorically "The company categorically denies connections with organized crime. No law enforcement official anywhere in the country had ever made such a charge."

ARA's oursing home division — which operates some 262 nursing with a total of more than 31,000 beds, has been another source of headaches for the company. It is currently embroiled in a hree-year court battle to maintain its license to operate a nursing home in Durango, Colo. State offi-cials there said ARA's cost-cutting methods had resulted in violations of nursing home standards.

The company also faces some bottom-line trouble. Its earnings fell to $45 million on sales of $2.9 billion in fiscal 1981 from $63 million on sales of $2.8 billion.

Part of the decline was the direct result of a California court decision reversing mandatory school desegregation in Los Angeles. The decision led to a 60-percent route reduction in Los Angeles, ARA's most important school bus market, and ARA had to sell or write off the value of some of its special 95passenger coaches.

LEAH AND LAZAR

By Elizabeth Swados. 267 pp. $13.95.

Summit Books, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 16020 Reviewed by Jonathan Yardley

THE prodigiously gifted Elizabeth Swados — author, composer and director of that remarkable musical production "Runaways" - now turns her hand to fiction. The results are mixed, as is invariably the case with first novels, but, on balance, most agreeably energetic and appealing.
"Leah and Lazar" is a contemporary fable about a young woman's search for identity, a familiar subject that Swados manages to treat with a dis-tinctively fanciful touch. Leah and Lazar are sister and brother, 9 and 14 years old, respec-tively. They live in upstate New York with their parents; the time is the late 1950s. Their father is an industrialist. a handsome man - "He had dark curly hair, peppered with gray, a finely cut mustache — he was tall and thin and walked very straight, because posture, he told [Leah], had a great deal to do with the image one pro-jected"—whose affectionate instincts are smothered under a blanket of buesslike reserve and diffidence. Their mother, by contrast, is a wispy, elusive figure who flits in and out of their lives without ever making a solid, lasting impression.

Ruffled Princess

The result is that the children are left pretty much to themselves. Lazar, when we first meet him, is a delight, a wildly eccentric boy who is the light of his sister's life:

"She tried to keep her wild, unruly head of hair organized for his inspection. She tried to get the sleep from out of the corners of her wide, gray eyes. Lazar told her she was as beaunful as a mad Polish princess. He him-self was often gruhby, with his white socks and their black toes. His finger-nails were dirty and his neck had lines of black on it as if he'd rubbed him-self with newsprint. He was tall and skinny with thick glasses and crossed eyes. He moved nervously as if always impatient. Yet he was handsome in proud, furious way. He brought Leah books to read, suggested outfits for her, and now and then gave her a short hug and a smacking kiss."

But Lazar's gaiety and whimsy are merely his thin lines of defense against the insanity that burns within him. It surfaces most ominously when he goes off to college. There he finds himself rooming with one Arnold J. Saks, "a street boy from New York City" whom Lazar, in a fit of late-adolescent infatuation, decides to adopt as a mentor. Unfortunately for him, that means instruction not merely in the fine art of being hip, but also in the consumption of various damaging drugs. While the charismatic Saks goes blithely about his own way, the discarded Lazar is sent off to a mental hospital — a step that marks the beginning of the end of his bright, sad

This leaves Leah very much on her own, and very much too young to know how to cope. A fascination with a fellow named Artie leads her to tran off with him to Florida, where the carns him two grand a week as a child prostitute; here the novel is sharply remnuscent of "Runaways" and its two powerful songs, Minnesota Strip" and "Song of a Child Pross-tute." At the end of this experience she is only 14 years old, world-weary yet still possessing "some molecules of a child in her." She sees herself as "full of disguess and identities," with her real self still undiscovered. She talks with an admissions officer at Bennington, who listens to a some-what embelished account of her fordid young life and offers this observa-

"I think you're tired I think you want a vacation. You want to be around in the mountain dir, read books, think about yourself, go to boring Williams mixers and be told in-relevant facts by outdated old profes-sors. You want to be a regular girl.

So off to Bennington she goes But her our of the seaming out sale of con-temporary experience is far from over. Ahead of her lie, among other things, various exposures to radical and pseudo-radical politics, an introduction to show business, an abortion and a ler-rible loss within her family. But at the end she emerges as a strong, inde-pendent girl who stands on the thresh-old of womanhood. She has rejected Lazar's self-destructiveness in favor of her own dignity and self-awareness. However painfully won, hers is indisputably a victory.

As the above suggests, a misor weakness of the novel is Swados insistence on plunging Leah into vina-ally every nook and cranny of late-20th-century life, no matter how sordid or bizarre. Too often she stretches credulity right past the breaking point, and she has difficulty restoring it — a problem that is compounded by her troubles with chronology, such as anachronisms (the Beatles before their time, among others) that pop up with annoying frequency. But these difficulties are largely canceled out by the novel's ingratiating combination of tenderness and insourciance, precisely the same combination that was so crucial to the success of "Runaways." Elizabeth Swados is obviously a person of great humanity and hu-mor; these are the distinguishing qualities of her first novel, just as the have been of her work in the theater and popular music.

CHESS

By Robert Byrne

HOW do you win with Black against a conservative player who won't risk sharp play, or offer a genuine gambit, or do anything to jeopardize a draw?

Whenever the question of striving for a victory comes up, you naturally think of a gambit, but there are few sound ones with White and even few-er with Black. And supposing you find the conditions for venturing one, conservative opponents decline them anyway.

Some means to challenge the opponent in a more subtle way must be found, even if it takes patience. The keynote is something that, while not patently unsound, would embarrass the opponent were he not to take you up on it. Of course, you then have to play awfully well, too. Observe how Robert Hübner, a 33-year-old West German grandmaster, accomplished the task in his game with Anatoly Lein, a Jersey City grandmaster, in the third round of the Cloverline International Tournament in Chicago. in Chicago.

Lein's unamhitious 8 QxBP put no obstacle in the way of Black's developing efficiently, but he was apparently not interested in the sharper play that can result from 8 N-K5. Against the do-nothing 11 B-K3, Hübner could have put forth the logical, normal 11 . . . P-B4, but instead chose the challenging 11 . . . N-N3!?, maintaining a more complex position. He surely must have judged that 12 N-K5, BxB; 13 KxB, B-Q3 would have been safe enough. In any case, Lem was prompted to try B-N5, so that, on 12 . . . P-B4, he could saddle Black with doubled pawns by 13 BxN, PxB, Still, Hubner got the bishop-pair and was not wor-ried about 14 N-N5?!, PxN; 15 BxB, R-R2; 16 PxP, QxQ; 17 PxQ, RxB; 18

PxN, RxP, which would have left White with a sickly QP. Hübner boldly established a queenside pawn majority with 14 . . . P-B5, then restrained the white center with 15 . . . P-B4. This new challenge probably could not be taken up since 16 P-Q5, NxP; 17 NxN, BxN; 18 N-K5, Q-Q3; 19 BxB, PxB; 20 QxKBP, Q-K3! is unpleasant for White. So Lein chose passive play, giving Hübner the leeway to improve the position of his pieces at a leisurely pace. After 27 . R-Ql, Lein must have been sorry, because his isolated QP was under siege and Hübner's pieces controlled the important squares.

With 28 N-B4, he sought a tactical solution to his problems, hoping for 28 . . . BxP?; 29 RxB!, RxR; 30 N-

Now that there was no longer any use in routine play, Lein gambled ca 31 BxP, with the tricky point that 31. PxB?; 32 QxPch, K-B1; 33 N-Nch! would turn the tables with a vengeance because 33. NxN pc mits 34 Q-K8mate.

Now, 32 B-R3, BxN!; 33 PxB (or 53 QxN, BxR), R-K5 would have piii Black a piece ahead. Thus, Lein had to lose two minor pieces for a 100k and pawn with 32 QxR, PxB; 33 RxF.

Twins: Unseasoned, Underpaid and Dead Last

By Ira Berkow

New York Times Service NEW YORK — The Minnesota Twins are the youngest, the least experienced, and the most poorly paid team in baseball. It may not come as a shock to learn that they also bave the worst record in baseball — 12-38 and an 11-game los-ing streak — and hold last place in the American League West.

The Twins, who completed a series with an 8-6 loss to New York Sunday in Minneapolis, have 13 rookies on their 26-man team; most teams carry perhaps two or three rookies. The Twins have started as many as seven first-year men at one time.

They have also been involved in several trades this spring that re-sulted in the departure of their more experienced players.

The team's average age is 251/2, and several of the players have. only recently come out of the lowest levels of the minor leagues. The average age for the rest of the American League is 28.

In the dugout in Baltimore before a recent game, Manager Billy Gardner, chewing on tobacco, was asked if the Twins have a problem in not knowing the opposing players. "No," he replied, "they just look 'em up in their bubble-gum

Not knowing each other might be a greater problem. "Sometaking a double bogey and Floyd was nicked for a bogey after an er-ror in club selection left him short said Pete Redfern, a pitcher who has been with the team for four seasons, "I look around the clubhouse at all the new faces and anaoplis 500's closest finish ever I feel as if I've been traded."

It was at the 13th that Floyd broke clear. From the fringe of the green he rolled in his 20-fout birdic, giving him the lead at six-under. On the 15th, a short par-5 of 490 just trying to keep the payroll the race.

Take the case of would-be presidential assassin John W. Hinckley Jr. To call someone like Hinckley crazy "is a tautology," says Szasz, because "you are simply plumbing the meaning of what people mean by crazy to-day in America." But he rejects the equation of craziness and nonresponsibility. The prosecu-non argument (that Hinckley was sane and responsible when be did his deed) and the defense argument (that he was insane and nonresponsible) are "symmetrical lies" and "equally ridiculous," he says. Both sides are engaged in "bamboozling the jury that there is something medical and scientif-

And the hamboozle, according to Szasz, is one of the tried-andtrue techniques of psychiatry. "I would say that the history of psychiatry is very largely the history of lies," he says, the words pop-ping across his small office with the force of hilliard shots. "The people who make the lies may believe them, but they are lies never-theless. Panents lie and psychiatrists lie. When the panents lie, we call them delusion. When the psychiatrists lie, we call them psychiatric theories."

adults." But "I don't think psychiatry would survive if it were restricted to consenting interventions, because it is hased entirely on slavery, ideologically and practically and economically."

In the early '60s, these attitudes and the actions that accompanied them led to what Szasz calls the big blow-up." commencing when the New York State com-missioner of mental hygiene dehcately advised Szasz's employer. the State University of New York, to re-evaluate his services. Szasz credits his survival only to the fact that be had tenure and "was as intelligent and as pugna-cious a Hungarian Jew as I am."

Medical Model

All that is "ancient history" now. His colleagues have grown accustomed to his face, and while they're about it to his quick toogue, to his smartly tailored wardrobe, and to a group of man-ual and digital habits that, in anyone who wasn't a psychiatrist, would probably be called "neurone" — e.g., scraping off pieces of Molson Ale label with a lingernail and stuffing them, one by one, into the empty bottle.

The medical model for examining problems of the mind arose, Szasz believes, for sound historical reasons - to bring an element of tolerance and compassion to the treatment of human aberration. But in the battle for acceptance, the theorists of Freud's time resorted to what Szasz regards as deceptive advertising — couching guesses and flights of fancy in the language of hard scientific fact and that process, be argues, has taken on a life of its own.

"The American Psychiatric Association is using I don't know how many millions of dollars of its money," he says, "for a legal effort to make sure that only psy-chiatrists get government funds, and not psychologists or social workers, no matter how compe-tent. Erik Erikson or Bruno Bettelheim? They're not competent, they're not MDs. The medical model is in the last analysis a guild model, a labor union model. It's a Jimmy Hoffa model. Who can drive a truck? It doesn't matter how well you drive it. It's who belongs to the club."

The leaders of the American psychiatric establishment have had long experience in defending themselves against Szasz's artilthemselves against SZasz's artillery attacks, and they do so with impressive calm. "He's a practicing psychiatrist who has a point of view which is expressed vividly and with great force," says Miles F. Shore, professor of psychiatry at Harvard. "Any live field which is dealing with serious issues has is dealing with serious issues has people with a variety of points of view. In this country, they have a right to be heard, to be evaluated and to help keep people's thinking straight." As for Szasz's comments on APA lobbying, "I don't know that the APA has tried to derogate or play down other mental health professions so much as it has tried to present to public bodies what psychiatrists do in a positive sense," says Shore, a member of the APA's public affairs board, "Other professional sional group." The attempt to place the imprimatur of science upon essentially subjective skills and causes has become more and more pervasive in recent years, Szasz believes, doesn't matter how colleading to a broad menace he are the rest of the way."

groups do that too. I think that's legitimate activity of a profes-calls "the medicalization of life." Consider — from the Szaszian perspective — the evidence:

 Schoolchildren are routinely given amphetamines - "government-issued poison," according to Szasz — for hyperactivity, while criminals and mental patients receive state-subsidized Thorazine, Valium and other psychoactive drugs - a "chemical

• The APA has discovered the existence of several new mental illnesses, including "Tobacco Use Disorder" and "Academic Underachievement Disorder."

• The sexologists William Masters and Virginia Johnson prescribe masturbation as therapy - for a new ailment they have christened "masturbatory orgasmic deficiency."

In these bulletins, Szasz sees a growing infatuation with the idea that "decisions are somehow secreted by the brain just as sugar is secreted by the kidney when you have diabetes. It's not a decision. It comes out . . . I do be-lieve in free will. I believe that what people do cannot be the proper subject matter of some kind of deterministic investigation. People can make choices and ought to be beld responsible in various ways for what they do

Psychotherapy can help people make those choices, says Szasz, but I mean psychotherapy in the old fashioned commonterm — people talking seriously about their life's problems. Freud didn't discover that. The Socratic dialogue would be a much better

People with problems, says Szasz should be free to seek help from the source of their choosing or no help at all, if they prefer. As a result of such sentiments, be has been portrayed as a cold-blooded libertarian who looks with approval on all human quirks and misfortunes. But Szasz sees himself as "someone who is trying to think reasonably and ssionately about very complicated problems." He does not claim that all behavior is equally good, be insists, only that "there aren't two kinds of people - mentally ill and everybody else. There are just peo-ple," That is psychiatry's underly-ing mistake, in the Szaszian analysis. "I like to compare it to the man who gets up in the morning and starts to button his shirt," he says. "If you button the first buttophole to the second button, it doesn't matter how careful you

PEOPLE Bing Crosby Auction Brings In $300,000

Kathryn Crosby says it was "wonderful" that so many fans of her late busband, Ring, would take the time to join in the four-day anction of his personal belonging. The fans spent $300,000 in picking up I.400 lots, some of which in cluded several items. "I want to thank everybody for coming Mrs. Crosby said at the conclusion of the auction at Butterfield's in San Francisco. The last item was a green Austrian bat which an uni dentified bidder obtained for $200 Two platinum recordings of Bing's "Silent Night" went for $1,700 each. One marked the 200 milhonth sale of the record, and the other the 300 millionth. Ann Toler, buying for Barry Gibb of the Bee Gees singing group, obtained Bing's personal Golf National Trail Putter for $7,500. Bing diedwhile playing golf in Spain in 1977, and his wife decided on the auction as a "celebration" to hon-or him. Six of Bing's rosaries went for $80. Movie posters for "White Christmas" and his "Road" pictures with Bob Hope went for $150. to $300. His desk sold for $1,800 and his wastebasket for $350. Somebody paid $250 for a photo signed by Jimmy Durante.

When the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh approached the podium to accept an honorary degree from Loyola Marymount University in Los Angles, he also closed in on a record set by Herbert Hoover. His 88th honorary doctorate put the University of Notre Dame president just two steps from getting his name in the Guinness Book of World Records - as holder of the largest number of honorary sheepskins ever awarded to one person. This month, he will receive his 89th degree, from Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital in Philadelphia, tying the all-time record now held by Hoover. Shorty after that, Hesburgh will receive his 90th honorary doctorate, from Kalamazoo College, and will set a record of his own. Racul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat credited with saving thousands of Hungarian Jews from the Nazis in 1944, will win the 1982 Freedom Award in absentia June 28 at the annual Freedom Festival Awards luncheon in Detroit. Wallenberg was taken prisoner by the Russians after World War II and his fate is unknown. His award will be accepted by former Swedisb Su-preme Court Justice Ingrid Garde Windemar.
